Getting Found on Google — a few practical ideas

For Zach · June 2026 · 419venueguy.com

The short version

Your website looks great and is set up right for Google. If more people are not finding you yet, it is not because something is broken — Google just needs time to pick up on a newer site, and local catering searches take a while to crack.

Most of what actually helps is stuff you already do well: real event photos, happy clients, Facebook, word of mouth. This guide is just the Google side of that — a handful of habits that add up over a few weeks.

How people find caterers on Google

When someone searches "caterer Fremont" or "food truck 419" or "event catering near me," Google usually shows two things:

1. The map with local businesses (Google Business Profile — photos, stars, phone number)
2. Regular website results below that

You are already strong on Facebook and referrals. Google is another lane — and it rewards consistency, not one big fix.

1. Google Business Profile — start here

Think of it as a second storefront. Biggest bang for your buck.

- Set website to <https://419venueguy.com>
- Primary category: Caterer (Food Truck or Event Planner as secondary if they fit)
- Description covers what you actually do: banquets, food truck, hibachi, photobooth, in-home chef, Fremont, 419 area
- Upload 10–20 photos from real events — graduations, truck nights, backyard parties, whatever you have
- Post every 2–4 weeks: a recent event photo, a menu highlight, or a seasonal note
- Reply to Google reviews when you can (even a quick thank you)

The map section gets a lot of clicks. A lot of people pick from there before they ever scroll to websites.

2. Google reviews — steady beats sudden

More reviews builds trust and visibility. You do not need hundreds — just keep adding them when you have a happy client.

After a great event, something simple works:

"If you have a minute, a Google review helps a ton. Mentioning what we did for your event is even better."

Any event counts: banquets, food truck nights, hibachi, in-home dinners, graduations, fundraisers.

3. Share 419venueguy.com the same way everywhere

- Facebook page Website field
- Email signature
- Menus and quotes you send out
- Business cards
- Venues and planners you work with — ask if they will list you with your link

Same link, same info, everywhere. Google picks up on that over time.

4. Local connections still matter

- Venues you have worked with — a preferred vendor mention with your website link goes a long way
- Photographers, DJs, planners in the area — trade referrals like you already do in person
- Any local business directory you are already part of — make sure the link is current

One real link from a venue or local org beats a dozen tiny website tweaks.

Website ideas — only when you want them

The site works great as one page right now. Down the road, if you want to target specific searches, we could add focused pages — things like food truck bookings, backyard hibachi, or event catering. Totally optional, no rush.

Other behind-the-scenes stuff I can handle whenever:

- Hook up Google Search Console so we can see what people are actually searching
- Speed up images a bit for phones
- Refresh photos or menu pricing when you send updates

What usually does not help

- Random "SEO packages" from cold emails or phone calls
- Expecting a flood of traffic in the first week — Google usually takes a month or two to reflect steady effort
- Paying for ads before the free basics (profile, photos, reviews) are in decent shape

Simple 30-day plan

Week 1 — Google Business Profile

- Confirm website = 419venueguy.com
- Upload 10+ event photos
- Refresh your business description
- Make one profile post with a recent photo

Week 2 — Reviews

- Reach out to 3 recent happy clients about a Google review
- Reply to any reviews you have not answered yet

Week 3 — Links

- Double-check Facebook About has 419venueguy.com
- Add the link to your email signature if it is not there

- Ask one venue or contact about listing you as a vendor

Week 4 — Keep it visible

- Facebook post with a few event photos and your site link
- Send me any new photos or menu changes worth adding

Realistic expectations

- 2–4 weeks: profile starts getting traction if photos and a couple reviews come in
- 1–3 months: more visibility for searches like "caterer Fremont" or people looking you up by name
- 3–6 months: broader event and food truck searches start moving if you keep posting and collecting reviews
- Every event is another chance: photos, a review, a Facebook post

You built this on relationships. Google is the same thing — just slower and more public.

Quick checklist

- & Google Business Profile has 419venueguy.com
- & 10+ photos uploaded to your Google profile
- & Asked a few recent clients for a review
- & Site link on Facebook and email signature
- & Sent any new event photos my way

That is it

No rush on any of this — pick what fits your week. If you want help finding your Google Business Profile login or knocking out any of the above together, just let me know.
